OPEN LAB DECEMBER: EXPERIMENTING IN THE PHOTO LAB

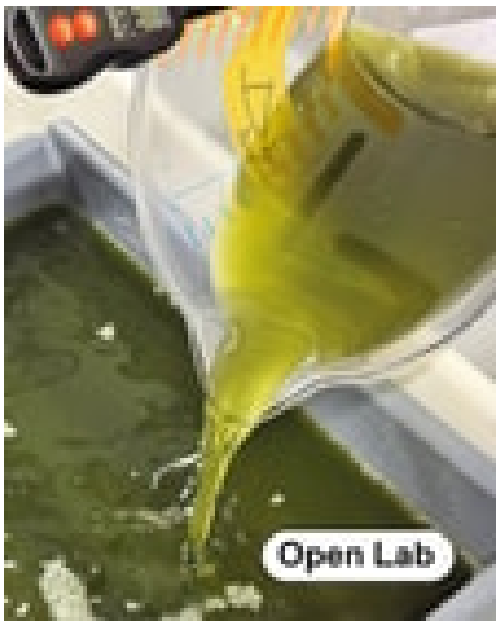

The idea behind Open Lab is simple: a photo lab is a valuable tool, and it is rarely easy to get into one. We want to change that.

Over two Saturdays, we open the lab to everyone: beginners, students, professionals and anyone looking for a place to experiment, whether for a first go at analogue photography or to go deeper into what they already know. Someone from the local photography scene is there each time to support, pass on knowledge and encourage exchange. Over time, the lab becomes a meeting point between people interested in photography, students and the local scene.

Rudolf Steiner opens the series. The artist and photographer lives and works in Biel, Rondchâtel and Warsaw. He is self-taught, moves between media and starts from the process: in Ricochet, a series begun in 2013, a camera robot records the landscape around his studio, and the deviations that appear along the way stay in the image.
